Presentation to Mrs. Wright.

A very pleasant time was spent New Year's Night when the teachers and members of "The Fair and Helping Hands" paid a surprise visit to the home of Rev. and Mrs. M. L. Wright. After a short programme of recitations and music, Mr. Elmer Still on behalf of the classes, presented Mrs. Wright with a Silk Piano Drapes and Hand-painted Toilet Set as a slight token of their appreciation of her services as superintendent of the Sunday School. Mr. Still in making the presentation, expressed the sentiments of the classes by wishing Mrs. Wright health and happiness not only for the year 1913 but for all the future years. Mrs. Wright although completely taken by surprise expressed her gratitude in a few well-chosen words. Refreshments were then served after which the remainder of the evening was spent in games and music.

CHAPTER V

Directly Franca saw Miss Salsbury he instinctively put his hands behind his back and then slipped the revolver into his trousers pocket. It felt the blood rush to his face with a sudden sense of shame. During the last two or three hours he had been acting as a man demoralized, imagination had free rein, and he had felt all self-control. Without pausing he had allowed his emotions to carry him where they listed.

Now, as he looked at the little grey-haired figure of Miss Salsbury, he knew for the first time where they had carried him. He saw that he stood on the edge of a terrible precipice.

One false step.
Those words had burnt into his mind. There had been many moments for him then, he had acted without thinking, without realizing for an instant the construction that would be placed upon his behavior. He had been merely looking upon her as a heart and had honestly repaid it.

Now he wondered what he had done. He had not been really a criminal, he had taken the second step without realizing the consequences. Vertigo seized him as he gazed over the imaginary precipice and saw Miss Salsbury making the terrible act he had not set out to do.

His hands fell to his side; he passed them across his face, directly in front of him. Jim Franca, who stood before this girl, already in his heart could not deny that he tried to speak, but his lips refused to move.

I beg your pardon, I didn't know you were here, Ella said, turning as if to leave the room.

I called to your father. It was a relief to hear his voice. He was expecting him every instant, yet you sit yourself here. Where did he come from I tell you now.

She opened the door and Jim Franca stepped over. He was duly curious as to what she felt, as it was a relief to hear his voice. He was expecting him every instant, yet you sit yourself here. Where did he come from I tell you now.

ALBERTA IN FAVOUR OF SINGLE TAX SYSTEM.

Norman Lumbert, the Toronto Globe's special representative in the West, writing from Calgary, says:

Single tax has been generally in force in Alberta for the past eight months, and the strongest evidence that the system has been successful is that the majority of the towns affected by it are unanimous in their approval of the principle of land taxation.

At the eighth annual convention of Alberta municipalities held in Innisfail last September a resolution favoring a uniform system of taxing land values was passed, and is now to be seen on the published report of the meeting. It is realized, of course, by the strongest supporters of single tax in Alberta that there is room for considerable improvement in the practical results of the scheme in the case of certain municipalities. The experience of Stettler and Ponoka have been used as arguments against the government's policy of taxation, but special conditions surround those two towns which, when examined, effect any serious objections to single tax as a uniform means of raising revenue.

The writer of this special article in the Calgary, Edmonton and Lethbridge newspapers, builds up the greater part of his case against the taxation of land values on the unfair assumption that Stettler and Ponoka are typical instances of the way in which single tax has succeeded throughout the whole Province. We shall first examine these two places and then deal with other parts of Alberta.

In the first instance, Stettler at the present time is reaping its wild oats. It was "bounced" ten such a couple of years ago on the strength of prospective railroad development, which never amounted to anything. When it was found that the treasury of the town had to be supplied exclusively from the revenue received from the tax on land only thirty out of seventy business places in the town were called upon to pay taxes, the result being that the rate in Stettler this year is 70 mills on the dollar. Then another factor is that a large block of the best property in the town belongs to the C.P.R. and is exempt from taxation of any kind. In the case of Ponoka, and there are other towns to a less degree in a similar position, its school lands extending beyond the boundaries of the town which are causing some dissatisfaction. These school lands, when included in a town's school district, are subject to the single tax just the same as business or residential properties, and in the small municipalities like Ponoka the school districts are liable to extend for a considerable distance into the country, thus involving much land belonging to the farmers, who will be subject to the same rate of taxation as the man living in town.

These are two cases typifying certain conditions which call for a measure of relief and which will be relieved. If one may be allowed to interpret the feeling of the Department of Municipal Affairs at the Parliament buildings in Edmonton. But even in Stettler and Ponoka the municipal officials favor the principal of taxing land values. They are complaining at present on the ground that the Government last February was too sweeping that it would have been better to adopt the single tax gradually. This, however, does not justify the anti-single tax writer in his statement that such towns as Ponoka and Stettler afford concrete reasons why the people of Alberta should spurn the very idea of single tax.

Probably the strongest argument in favor of the universal adoption of Henry George's teachings in Alberta is that Marled, one of the three old towns in the province, incorporated under special charters during the regime of the territorial government, and thus outside of the jurisdiction of the present Provincial Government in matters of taxation, came under the present single tax system as the result of special application to the Department of Municipal Affairs. Red Deer and Cardston are the other two municipalities having special dispensation from the exactions of the town act. Red Deer is now practically a single tax town, a very small proportion of its revenue being now raised through its improvement tax. Cardston has not as yet been identified with the principles of land taxation.

The city of Edmonton is the best example of a large centre having had a most successful experience with single tax. Of course Edmonton has had a very much longer experience with the system than those towns which were introduced to it last spring, but the point is that few people in the capital of Alberta would ever favor returning to the old methods of taxation. And Edmonton's total municipal assessment for 1912 was $127,781,800. Calgary, too, is fast becoming devoted to the principles of Henry George regarding taxation. These towns and cities which have given the system a fair trial do not want anything else, and that is the incontestable argument supporting the single tax propaganda. In Alberta there are a number of communities which have been prevented from benefiting themselves to death during the past year largely as the result of the town act which was passed last February. Single tax is not liked by the man who has abundance of questionable real estate to sell, and this is another good reason why the people of the west are beginning to hold up their hands for single tax.

Rev. A. W. K. Hordman left Tuesday night for Calgary, where he has secured an appointment under the provincial government.

Following the Christmas and New Year holidays, the town has presented a rather quiet appearance this week quite a marked contrast to the usual bustle that is to be observed on the streets of Bow Island.

A large fall of snow on Thursday night was received with a hearty welcome by farmers and townspeople alike. It all helps to diminish the fears of a shortage in moisture next summer.

A very high wind visited Bow Island on Wednesday night. The fence recently erected by the Hockey club around their rink was scattered in all directions, and sundry other damage is reported, although not of a serious character.

At a meeting of the Liberals of Medicine Hat constituency held in that city last week, the following were appointed rural executive members:—Alex. Ashton, Whittall; D. McDougall, Winnifred; R. McKenzie, Altorad; W. A. Jones, Prosper; A. M. Bouch, E. B. Still, Windy Ridge. Among the speeches delivered was one by R. A. Parker of Winnifred.

A farewell service was held in the Presbyterian church on Sunday last, by the Rev. A. W. K. Hordman, this being his last Sunday in Bow Island previous to him taking his departure for Calgary. A large congregation was present and took the keenest interest in the service.

The C.P.R. has effected a great improvement at the local depot by placing lamps at intervals along the platform. The need of these has been felt for some time, and the innovation will undoubtedly be greatly appreciated by the travelling public.
